Returning students can use their college credit to complete a degree on their own schedule

Texas just made it easier for adults to return to college to finish their degrees on their own schedules and to use the college credit they've already earned. By visiting the web site GradTX.org, adults hoping to return to college can preview how their credits will count toward a bachelor's degree at one or more participating Texas universities, where most of their prior coursework will transfer. [\[more\]](#)

Thousands of high school students to get the best college advising available

Advise TX has placed highly trained college advisers in 120 Texas high schools this fall, in an effort to lead low-income and first-generation students to college. From picking the right school and completing the entrance requirements to finding interesting scholarship opportunities, the advisers are well qualified to guide students and their parents through the complex process of going to college.
